Contractual Preface

It is key to have a formal written contract in place between a Master and his Slave. This is a unique Dominant/submissive relationship which sits in a framework that must be adhered to correctly for the satisfaction of both parties but most importantly for the satisfaction of the Master.

Most contracts are written for the safeguarding of one party over another, and this contract is no different, with its prime focus being to ensure that the Master's needs, desires and wildest imaginations are fulfilled whenever and wherever he so desires without any consideration for the Slaves feelings capabilities or resultant burdens. Below is an example of the contract that most Slaves will complete sign and return. Once in place this document stands as the overarching legally valid ruleset and regime which the Slave has agreed to. This contract can only be revised or dissolved by the Master. Amendments requested by the Slave and or by third parties on behalf of the Slave will be invalid and thus discarded.

For all intents and purposes this contract embeds a onetime multigenerational agreement into law, the effect of which is multigenerational bondage in the form of a legally binding full-service contract valid until such a time the Master or his heirs void the contract or the Slave is declared deceased with no kin that will assume the responsibilities of the contract.
